

Peer Reviewer Awards

The CJRT is pleased to introduce an award to recognize the contribution of the volunteer peer reviewer who provided constructive feedback and guidance to help authors enhance their papers in presentation and content.

To see a list of all reviewers who contributed reviews in 2025, please visit our Thank You page.

2025 Winner Phoebe Lam

"Peer reviewing has been a rewarding way to stay connected with the latest research while giving back to a profession that has shaped my career. It's humbling to support authors and strengthen our shared knowledge through the peer review process."

2024: Keslyn Bevan

"I peer review because it helps me stay current, engage with new ideas and sharpen my own understanding of the sciences behind of Respiratory Therapy. It's also a way for me to contribute to the RT community, helping to ensure that research meets high standards and is valuable to our field."

2023: Jennifer LeBlanc

"I'm proud to be a peer reviewer for the CJRT over the past several years. It has been very rewarding to participate in the vital peer review process and a privilege to review innovative research and manuscripts that are imperative to growing our understanding of the respiratory field. I always learn so much through this work and it has allowed me to stay on top of the latest emerging trends and research."

2022: Jillian Shadbolt

"I am proud to be a peer reviewer for the CJRT. I love helping authors elevate their manuscripts and ensuring the robustness of scientific evidence. I also learn so much along the way!"

2021: Danielle McDonagh

"Participating in the peer-review process for the CJRT is incredibly rewarding. It is a joy and privilege to review the innovative articles, reviews, and research offered to the CJRT. In addition to helping to ensure the credibility and integrity of the work, peer-reviewing allows me to hone my critical thinking skills. It is incredibly gratifying to read the final work when published in the CJRT."